[click on image to enlarge] Features [click on image to enlarge] One of the key new features of AutoCAD 2017 is the introduction of layers, a way to organize and edit elements in drawings and model files. Objects (features) are divided into groups called layers. For example, you can have a single layer that contains a single building, or several layers that each contain buildings. To create layers, you simply select the layer and create it. If you have multiple AutoCAD drawings open, you can quickly switch between layers. Multiple drawings and models can be arranged on one screen. For example, if you are working on a floorplan in one drawing and a pipe diagram in another, you can switch between the two drawings and see the same layout in two different views. You can also include drawings and other files that you create with layers in your AutoCAD drawing. For example, you can add a drawing of a pipe system as a layer, which can be edited and saved, and then imported into a design. For example, you can work with a building in one drawing while viewing the layout of the same building in other drawings, in different locations or orientations. You can also work with a factory floor plan in one drawing while viewing the same floor plan in another drawing. There are five levels of layers, which are explained in detail later in this article. By default, all objects in your drawing are organized into one level. You can arrange and edit objects in many ways, such as into groups

I've been a long time fan of Diablo, but when the beta came out I was disappointed by the need to connect to Blizzard's servers to play any more than the first 10 levels. I thought that Blizzard's Diablo III was out to push these draconian policies. Now, though, it seems like the features Blizzard was adding to keep people connected made it the antithesis of Diablo III: there are no more free weekends, no more character wipes, no more such-and-such class is only available to the alts. They don't want anyone to be able to buy their way out of the game. I won't be at Blizzcon, but I've been considering buying a ticket for the DH launch just to stand on the outside and cheer for everyone as they finish the game. A friend and I played a game a while back where one player was actually a Diablo-style game and the other a more mainstream RPG. The Diablo-style player had more HP
