2012.rargolkes. One of the most controversial subjects in the world of Japanese games in 2017 was what became known as the “pachinko ban”. Pachinko halls across the country were forced to close due to the large number of players consuming a large amount of alcohol and causing problems and gangs. Additionally, more than half of the revenue of the pachinko industry comes from alcohol sales. This was not a new issue, but a more aggressive crackdown on the illegal alcohol sales led to an increase in speed of the demise of many pachinko halls. In 2017 alone, 1,333 shops shut down and the remaining 891 shops were completely shut down in 2019 by the end of October. Pachinko is a unique industry in the Japanese market. The halls are only licensed to sell food and drinks and they have to be completely closed to players when they want to turn off their machines. Players are required to have their tokens exchanged, but the process is known to be chaotic. The game is also similar to a lottery in that players can buy small, medium, or large amount tickets that they can choose from before they play. Tokens are redeemable for prizes at the end of the game. When shops shut down, they are not replaced but simply reopened after the required inspections. Players that paid taxes to the shops' corporations are not compensated because they are not licensed establishments. Alcohol sales are fully taxed in Japan, so those who have been purchasing alcohol and paying taxes are not getting anything back for the lost revenue. There were numerous rallies during 2017 to bring the problem to the attention of the government. However, even with just 1,666 shops being closed in total, there were still thousands of pachinko players drinking alcohol in the halls. There is no way to actually check if players are actually purchasing alcohol or not, as the machines are required to be completely shut off when the inspectors visit them. A group of 11 businesses in the business of marketing alcoholic beverages launched a lawsuit against the Ministry of Economy, Trade and Industry for not providing compensation for pachinko halls that were forced to close due to enforcement. The government replied to the group of companies to maintain that there are no plans to change this. The company that is
